

INTERACTIONS
INSTITUTE

WORKSHOP 90 MINUTE

DESIGNING SPACES FOR THE FUTURE: INVOLVING YOUNG PEOPLE IN PLANNING AND DESIGN

This workshop will delve into the practical aspects of including young people in the design of spaces and projects. Participants will explore how involving children and young people can enhance the functionality and inclusivity of environments, and how this collaboration can benefit both the young people and the wider community.

Objectives:

- Understand the principles of inclusive design and the role of young people in this process.
- Explore case studies where youth involvement has transformed spaces.
- Develop strategies for integrating young people's perspectives into design projects.

WORKSHOP FACILITATOR

Dr Zazie Bowen

Zazie is an anthropologist and writer, passionate about education ethnography and research with young people. After working in schools, preschools, and playgroups in Australia, Pacific, Africa and India, Zazie undertook doctoral research into young people's peer play as a cultural expression and a mode of understanding young people's social and environmental perspectives and experiences. She has hosted international conferences on childhoods and on gender in South Asia and South-east Asia at the Australian National University leading to the publication of a book and two special issue journals. She is dedicated to transformative intergenerational collaborations.

www.interactionsinstitute.com.au

support@interactionsocialresearch.com.au